Transference Focused Psychotherapy: Overview and Update

A Day with Otto F. Kernberg, MD, FAPA

December 10, 2010

Morning Session: This session will be dedicated, first, to the field of severe personality disorders for which a specific psychodynamic psychotherapy - Transference Focused Psychotherapy (TFP) - has been developed and empirically researched in the Personality Disorders Institute of Weill Cornell Medical College and the Westchester Division of the NewYork-Presbyterian Hospital. The differential diagnosis of these conditions and a specifically devised diagnostic approach will be summarized. Second, psychoanalytic object relations theory, the basis of TFP will be outlined and the general strategies, techniques, and tactics of this approach explored.

Afternoon Session: The psychotherapeutic emergencies and complications that evolve in the course of treatment will be illustrated with clinical material, and their technical management outlined. Particular emphasis will be given to the assessment and treatment of suicidal risk, severe acting out, paranoid regression, and narcissistic transferences. The questions of the relationship of mentalization to interpretation, transference and countertransference analysis, and the application of TFP to group therapy will be explored in the context of this presentation.

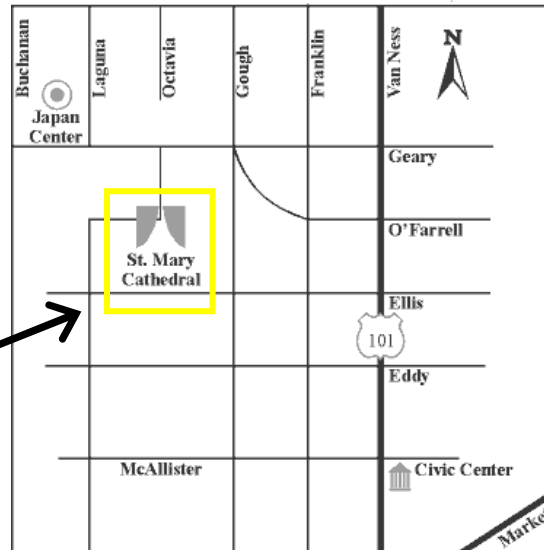

Goals & Objectives: As a result of attending this seminar, the participant will be able to:

1. Learn the strategy, tactics, and techniques of Transference Focused Psychotherapy
2. Learn assessment of severe personality disorders, indicators and contraindications for treatment, and prognostic criteria
3. Acquire skills for dealing with the most typical emergencies and complications in the course of treatment
